

G. O. P. VICTORY DUE TO FIGHT FOR WHITE SUPREMACY

John W. Farley, Local Republican Leader, Analyzes Surprising Flop of Tennessee to Republican Column.

"The result of the election in Tennessee, which for the first time in 50 years will have its electoral vote counted in the Republican column, is undoubtedly largely due to the fight for white supremacy in the party councils which was made by the Republican leaders in West Tennessee, notably in the city of Memphis and the Tenth congressional district."

This is the statement of John W. Farley, local Republican leader, who has been making a fight for six years to make the organization of the Republican party in the South a "white party."

Mr. Farley is the author of "Statistics and Politics," a book which is an analysis of the Republican situation in the South that has attracted national attention. In this work Mr. Farley proves by statistics that the negro is a liability rather than an asset to the Republican party, and that the sections having the largest negro population invariably show the lowest Republican vote.

"This work was begun five or six years ago," Mr. Farley continues, "and was carried on determinedly this year, in spite of the opposition of Chairman Hays, of the Republican national committee, and those members of the national committee and of the state committee who sided with him."

"Every meeting and committee of the Republicans of the counties in the Tenth congressional district was made a strictly 'illy white' affair, and contests were waged in the Tennessee state convention and in the national convention at Chicago by the white Republicans of the Tenth Tennessee district. The contesting negro delegation from the Tenth district in the national convention being finally cast into outer darkness."

"The result was shown on Tuesday, when thousands of business men in the Tenth district who had not voted in years cast their ballots for the Republican candidates, and thousands of other men—and women—who had formerly been classed as Democrats, also voted the Republican ticket for Harding and Cox, and for Alf A. Taylor, the Republican candidate for governor."

"Learning business men who are Republicans and who had heretofore been ashamed and have hidden out because of the odium borne by the Republican party locally in the past came out in the open and made themselves known."

"In Memphis, where the census figures in 1910 showed a larger ratio of negro residents, in proportion to total population, than in any other city of more than 100,000 population, the returns show that the gain of more than 100 per cent in the Republican vote in the city this year over that of four years ago, was made in strictly white wards, and that comparatively few negroes voted at all except in two or three wards, where they form the larger proportion of the population.

"Practically all the negroes who voted were women who were not liable for poll tax. All of the negroes did not vote for Republican candidates."

"The Republican leaders of the Tenth congressional district took the lead in this fight for white supremacy in the party, and their work paved the way to have so far-reaching an effect throughout the South. For example, while party leaders in West Tennessee and especially Memphis, fought any affiliation with the negroes, and won, the opposite was true in Kentucky, where the Republicans appealed to the negroes and lost for the state for the national ticket, as they could not secure even its full party vote and won no Democratic support."

"The same situation exists in many scattered points in other Southern states, notable Republican gains being reported wherever the 'illy white' organizations were strongly pushed. There would seem to be a lesson of considerable value to national Republican leaders in the results in the Southern states, which they will be very apt to study in the light of past experiences."
